

Aloha my name is Jennifer Meyers 🌺

I would like to share something that I have noticed by attending these HPP board meetings.

I notice a number of persons speaking at our board meetings and what they have to say is a good and valid point. But the way that it is delivered makes me not want to give their words value. It immediately makes me dig my heels in and resist listening to the content of what is being said.

People naturally resist when people are talking down to them or even their valid complaints being disrespectful. When we speak in a respectful way and show aloha we are far more likely to be heard.

Everyone, let's please consider this as we speak? If we show aloha and respect then our words are far more likely to be louder and better heard.
